THE MINISTER OF STATE OF THE MINISTRY OF LABOUR (SHRI P.A. SANGMA): (a) As per provisional figures complied by Labour Bureau, Shimla, there were 6630 working chemical factories in the country in 1983 producing various types of chemicals. The total number of chemicals produced in these factories is not available. The rate of fatal injuries per 1000 workers during the year 1983 in the chemical industry was 0.14. During the same year, the rate of fatal injuries per 1000 workers was highest in manufacture of Basic Metal and Alloy Industries, being 0.26.

(b) and (c) The Environment (Protection) Act, 1986 has made provisions regarding 'hazardous substances'. Besides, the Factories Act, 1948 has recently been amended in order to provide for special safeguards in regard to hazardous substances and lay down emergency standards and measures. Some of the provisions of the Amendment Act include general responsibilities of occupiers and manufacturers relating to health and safety of workers, declaration of safety policy and disclosure of information by the occupier in respect of hazardous processes, drawing up of emergency plans, workers' participation in safety management and accident prevention.

A number of steps have been taken by the Ministry of Labour to improve enforcement of provisions relating to safety. A Centrally Sponsored Scheme for strengthening industrial hygiene laboratories under the Factories Directorates is under implementation. Steps have been taken for arranging training of Inspectors of Factories. A Project for establishment of Major Hazard Control System has also been taken up for implementation in collaboration with International Labour Organisation.
